Politicians value their constituents' opinions 75% more than Internet messages.

Of 16 factors rated on a scale of 1-6, constituents influenced representatives the most (5.92: 98th percentile)

Internet-based messages influence representatives at the 48th percentile.*

On the Internet, no one knows you're a constituent, especially politicians and their staffs. So they ignore all the messages that the web inspires and delivers, unless they reinforce their ideological biases.

Super Voters influence their politicians to support fellow Super Voters' causes

I vote for you by lobbying my politician to support your cause, and vice versa.

Super Voters pledge their votes in return for loyalty. Politicians profit because they get votes for free.

Super Voters manage their politicians as easily as they manage their iTunes.

"A new president -- even one as talented and well-motivated as Obama -- can't get a thing done in Washington unless the public is actively behind him. As FDR said in the reelection campaign of 1936 when a lady insisted that if she were to vote for him he must commit to a long list of objectives, 'Ma'am, I want to do those things, but you must make me'...

"Find friends and family members in red states who agree with you, and get them fired up to do the same. For example, if you happen to have a good friend or family member in Montana, you might ask him or her to write Max Baucus and tell him they want a public option included in any healthcare bill. "

(Robert Reich former Labor Secretary and Obama adviser, Salon, July 6, 2009.)

"SCHIP advocates were joined by six Republicans who had voted against the bill last year. Interestingly, one of those lawmakers was Rep. Thaddeus McCotter (R-MI). So what changed?

"McCotter faced enormous discontent from many of his constituents after his "nay" vote [on the SCHIP bill], as did many of his colleagues. In fact, 11 Republicans who voted against SCHIP lost their seats in 2008. McCotter held on to his seat, but just barely — he won only "51% against a Dem who raised just $29K."

"Yesterday's SCHIP vote may be part of the new McCotter... We are now free to start thinking again, acting again, and doing the right thing by what our constituents and our country need."

(Amanda Terkel, Think Progress, Rep. McCotter Votes For SCHIP, Loses His 'Soul', January 15, 2009)
